Rewarding the Players with a Hidden Game
Content 10.02 - Repikermund & Panther Guise - Screenshots+

The introduction of the Back to School Mode, when merging with the free update that is currently being tested, will begin the process of resetting Starbound to a new in-game date, with the end of all high-level game quests having been undone.

Bugs and the new dynamic lighting for the game also remain work in progress, but we're confident in saying that they'll be fixed soon and the players won't miss out on anything.

Players who wish to practice while having their work not undone will have to turn off Update Chunk Creation, for now.

With great progress being made with the upcoming features, we'll be sure to keep you updated as soon as they become available. Thank you for your continued support.

In three days, a lot of new content was added to the game. Repikermund and Panther Guise—or “Panther” for short—are now controllable as NPCs, at no cost. With Panther, players can now take on the role of other bounty hunters who have a natural affinity to the beast. You can now be controlled manually by inputting in Player Controller or the tried-and-tested First Person Controller mode. Modders will also be happy to know that, in the future, they will no longer have to turn off the Update Chunk Creation process.

New features are still being worked on, and we will provide additional details when they are ready. Thank you for your continued support.

Equipping wafer fabrication facilities (FABs) with these methods is a required step in the production of integrated circuits (ICs). These methods are also useful to identify potential problems that might occur during the wafer fabrication process. Many of the technologies currently used for equipment monitoring include the following: large fluorescent lamps as the primary light source for process monitoring; large, cumbersome arrays of light detectors mounted to the front-side of the wafers as primary wafer-based monitoring devices; and optical fibers (“Optical Sensor”) as secondary wafer-based monitoring devices. Also, current wafer processing facilities have a number of inherent drawbacks, such as: wafer-specific processing systems that require frequent cleaning; low wafer throughput as a result of manual intervention and multiple cleaning steps; and inconsistent results due to the introduction of contaminants into the equipment through wafer processing. Such a diversity of methods for
